	Title of the Ph. D.	Perspective of Economic Growth among selected South and East Asian Economies
	Salient features of Ph.D. (in 100 words)	The thesis covered the causes of economic growth in the east Asian region which led them to move ahead of all and South Asian nations. The thesis employed various methodological tools including DEA with growth accounting and kernel densities to understand the shifts in distributions of per capita incomes. More importantly the thesis gave theoretical justification for employing the per capita income growth equation using Solovian model assumptions. Technology where modelled and hence the model employed had features of both exogenous and endogenous growth models.

5	Any other important academic achievement of the PI and Co- PI (approx. 150 words)
	My research work in places like UNESCAP and in UTE-Ecuador linking trade with environment and using partial and general equilibrium methodologies have received greater attention and we have journal articles and books based on the work done abroad. Then research work on spatial convergence has led to development of a new courses on Spatial Econometrics, Time series Econometrics with applications in Macroeconomics and trade, Carbon trading and Energy Economics, Efficiency and Productivity Analysis ,among others introduced for the first time in the IITK curriculum. Papers culled out of the research in spatial convergence among Indian districts have been accepted at prestigious conferences like that of the ISI Delhi, Winter School, DSE and International Economic Association meeting, Columbia 2023. Our book on Changing Trade Relations of India: A Partial and General Equilibrium Analysis is published by Routledge 2026.
