

ABSTRACT

Aggregate shape has a significant effect on the performance of the systems in which they are used. Previous studies have distinguished shape into three aspects as form, angularity and surface texture. These three aspects are asperities at different scales. An objective basis is proposed to demarcate form, angularity and surface texture based on frequency domain perspective. Also, a unified quantification method is developed to quantify these three characteristics of shape.